DICKENS!

THE DARKNESS

THE teeming thousands of people and cars that shuttled back and forth looked to Dick Blane like a story book creation. He had never seen this great city before, had no idea of its magnitude. It almost frightened him.

Dick was glad when he reached the building housing the giant laboratory where he had just landed a job as research chemist. From a mountain home to a great city is a broad jump for a young fellow who has known only the wide open spaces. Dick was glad of his chance. He'd make the best of it.

Unquestionably, Dick Blane was a "different" young man. A lifetime spent amid great ranches and forests hardly lends itself to chemistry—unless it is the natural chemistry prompted by the great outdoors. But Dick was different. He had always been interested in chemistry—had made several startling inventions that had to do with electronics. Now here he was.

Dick didn't have a great deal to do the first week in the big lab. Archer, the head of the organization, had told him to "get the feel" of the place first. There was plenty of time to start working.

The Archer Laboratories were famous the world over. And across town there was another laboratory where fame was an unwanted thing—at least the technicians working there shunned publicity of any kind. They were working on something calculated to destroy civilization, by first overthrowing democracy.

The head of this evil outfit was Serge K. Vossenn, a man so little known even to his assistants that he was often called simply "Mr. X." No one knew anything about Vossenn, only that he was a master chemist and physicist. Actually, Mr. X was the nearest approach to Satan himself that the earth has ever known.

Vossenn and his men had been working quietly for many months on a device that they hoped would lay the world in their laps.

So secret was this device that none of the assistants knew exactly what it was. Each one had his own work. Each man had a specific assignment. Only Mr. X knew the entire plan. To him was given the job of final assembling of the parts. Thus Mr. X was a valuable man to the country for which he worked.

It was on Tuesday, August 12, that the cloud first appeared over the city. At first no one paid any attention to it. It grew as a faint black cloud in the east. It kept growing. Something like a storm cloud. By mid-afternoon that day the cloud had obscured the entire eastern half of the harbor and was crawling over the city. Pitch black it was.

The first stars that night were soon blacked out by the cloud. People began to wonder about this phenomenon. There was no lightning. No rain. It was rather ominous. There was no moon that night, although the sister planet was at the full.

"Oh, well, just a big storm cloud," people said, and went to sleep. But the next morning they changed their tune. Dawn came without any sun. The morning was jet black. Even at nine o'clock, when the sun should have been blazing down, there was utter darkness. The chickens in the rural sections stayed on their perches.

Traffic was snarled. The gleaming headlights failed to penetrate the strange darkness perfectly. By mid-afternoon it was discovered that the effect of headlights, and even those inside buildings, was growing less effective. By dinner time it was impossible to see the brightest lights.

Thousands of people thought they had gone blind. Screams and wailings began to be heard in the poorer sections of the city. The end of the world was here. Optimistic drivers still tried to get their cars through the thick stalled traffic. There were thousands of terrible crashes.

The radio news was frightful. What horrible calamity had descended upon one of the world's largest cities?

The horror spread—one great metropolitan center after another, six in all. Hundreds of thousands of people were killed in accidents. Other thousands killed themselves in emotional frenzies.

And then the first message came through the ghostly blackness of the ether.

"The darkness will remain until you have surrendered. If you refuse to surrender, your entire country will be electrocuted. The substance of the darkness is metallic. It can easily be charged with high voltages. That would result in instant annihilation of the race. Warning! Broadcast your surrender immediately—before it is too late. The world king has spoken."

Consternation was great after this eery broadcast, which was received in every city of the nation. The cities not yet darkened were skeptical. Those in darkness were ready to accede to the demands of whatever madman it was who controlled this terrible agency of blindness.

And into this dilemma stepped young Dick Blane. Over the city's most powerful radio station he broadcast an impassioned plea to the citizens to hold off a while. "We don't know as yet what this curse is, but we are working on it. Give us a few hours before you surrender."

Back from the void came the voice of the world king:

"Within twelve hours, all of your cities will be in total darkness. Unless you have surrendered by that time, I'll wipe you all out!"

There was no temporizing with this monster. He meant business. He was evidently using a stratoplane to fly over the country, releasing whatever Agency he employed to create the darkness. There was no trapping him via the air. Then how to stop him?

That was the problem Dick Blane set himself to solve. First, it was necessary to find out what made the fog of blackness that now shrouded almost the entire country. Fog? Smoke? Analysis showed none of these things in the strange substance. The world king had mentioned that he could electrocute everybody by using his darkness as a medium. Ah, then!

"I think I have it," said Dick to one of his assistants. "It's metallic—some kind of fine metal dust. With some way to disintegrate—" Dick halted his speech when a big idea hit him. Yes, he'd try it.

Dick hurried out to the airport and stumbled into the flight control tower. He had learned his way in the darkness long since. Now if he could get a plane.

There was no pilot who would venture up in any ship, so Dick got in touch with the Army and borrowed a robot plane. After two hours spent in fitting the small plane with various instruments that would record and send their messages to a ground receiving set, Dick was ready for his experiment.

He sent the plane aloft. At three thousand feet the instruments sent the information that the cloud of darkness began at about that elevation.

Now how to break it up! Dick tried exploding shells at various altitudes. He thought one explosion let through a bit of light, but shells were not the answer.

He dared not employ electric current because of the danger of electrocuting everybody. Would the stuff burn? And if so—

The next two hours Dick spent making certain that the fog didn't exist any closer to the surface than 2800 feet. His experiment might thus be safe enough.

In total darkness, and with the help of many young Army technicians, Dick got an anti-aircraft gun loaded with a shell containing magnesium. It was set to explode at 3000 feet. What would happen? Even if a few persons were killed, the experiment must take place.

The gun was fired. Almost instantly a vast blinding sheet of flame enveloped the upper air. When the astonished people could see anything, they were overjoyed to find the blessed sunshine beaming down once more. The results of the experiment were radioed all over the nation. At the same time thousands of jet planes took off in a vast manhunt in the sky.

The world king met his end over the ocean, in an attempt to escape. And that was the last of a terrible scourge!

SAFETY TIPS

BICYCLE SAFELY...

Careless bicycling may cause accidents! Always ride single file. Never "hitch on" to car or truck. Follow all traffic signs, rules. Avoid ruts. Ride close to right edge of road. Use hand signals for turns, stops.

ROLLER SKATE SAFELY...

Avoid roller skating accidents by being careful. Always skate on sidewalk. Come to stop at curbs. Cross streets at corners only. Do not "hitch" on to bicyclists. Cross small cracks at right angles.

DRIVE SAFELY...

An average of more than ONE MILLION children, women, men are injured every year in traffic accidents! Think that over, Buddy! Decide now that when you are old enough to get your driver's license—and after you get it—you will remember and follow the safety driving rules you learned.

CROSS STREETS SAFELY...

Always stop at curb, look right and left to see if street is clear. Cross streets only at corners. Obey signal lights. Remember, an auto moves faster than you can run. And don't run . . . walk!
